

Online more accessible: now: most people work full time > at least 5pm > they are tired and no time to shop > prefer to get online BUT not everything available online > have to buy prints > FUTURE: when everything published online > stop reading paper altogether

Finally, online content will become more accessible in the future. Nowadays, most people work full-time until at least 5 p.m., which makes them tired, and they do not have enough time to shop in person, so they prefer to purchase digital books and online newspapers.

However, everything is not available online, and sometimes they still have to buy printed content. But in the future when everything will be is published online, and people will stop reading paper books and newspapers.

Commented [ET1]: This is a long sentence (35 words and consists of four clauses. I would break it down to two sentences:
Nowadays, most people work full-time until at least 5 p.m., which makes them tired. They do not have enough time to shop in person, so they prefer to purchase digital books and online newspapers.

Commented [ET2]: More natural: not everything is available...

Commented [ET3]: You proved this earlier, so you should write in a way that refers to that earlier message.
