

An increasing number of people are changing careers during their working lives.
What do you think are the reasons for this?
Do you think this is a positive or negative development for them and their communities?

The number of individuals changing jobs during their working lives is increasing. In this essay, I will outline the reasons for this phenomenon, as well as why I strongly believe it is a negative development due to its negative impact on ~~professional development~~ the number of experts in societies.

One reason is that people have a low income to live on. Nowadays, economic conditions are getting worse, and expenses don't match their wages. Since they are not satisfied with their salaries, they change their jobs to earn a higher income. In addition, individuals have different interests during their working lives. Most of them change their opinions and passions as they get older, so they may look for jobs that better suit their new interests and lifestyles. To illustrate, during their twenties, they follow their interests and tend to choose physically active jobs, such as being coaches and waiters, whereas in their fifties, they prefer to have sedentary and office-based jobs, like being officers and managers.

While some people argue that since they change their careers mainly for job satisfaction, ~~they can lead to~~ a more peaceful society can develop, I strongly believe that people changing jobs are not able to become professional employees for their communities. Being successful workers in society takes lots of time and effort, and without long-term experiences, they are not able to be effective members of their community. Hence, the number of experts may decrease, and may waste countries facilities.

In conclusion, since ~~they~~ some individuals receive low salaries and have different interests during their working lives, ~~most of an increasing number of~~ them change their careers, which is a negative phenomenon due to its ~~negative~~ influence on ~~professional development of communities~~ the availability of experts in communities.

TR 6 → 7
CC 6 → 7
LR 7
GRA 7

One reason is that people have a low income to live on. Nowadays, economic conditions are becoming worse, and expenses do not match their wages, as a result of which they try to find jobs with higher pay.

While some people argue that since they change their careers mainly for job satisfaction, they can lead to a more peaceful society, I strongly believe that people changing jobs are not able to become professionals who can solve the problems of their communities. Becoming an expert takes lots of time and effort, and without long-term experiences, they are not able to be effective members of their community who can analyze its issues and find effective solutions.